Labor Code § 203..... 3

1 I. INTRODUCTION

2 Apparently recognizing that the 6-paragraph declaration of Kevin Quast, 3 Defendants' Chief Operations Officer, was woefully inadequate to meet their 4 burden of proof for removal of this action, Defendants offer the supplemental 5 declaration of Mr. Quast and the declaration of Defendants' counsel, Richard H.
 6 Rahm. Rather than fortify their evidence, these declarations further expose 7 Defendants almost complete reliance on "speculative and self-serving assumptions 8 about key unknown variables." Carag v. Barnes & Noble Booksellers, Inc. (C.D.
 9 Cal. May 30, 2014) 2014 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 74215* 9-10 citing Garibay v.
 10 Archstone Communities LLC (9th Cir. 2013) 539 F. App'x 763, 764<sup>1</sup>.

11 In Carag, defendant relied "on speculative and self-serving assumptions 12 about key unknown variables" in their meal and rest break damages calculations, 13 because defendant relied on "each class member missing fifteen meal breaks per 14 year and suffering three violations of the minimum wage laws a year." However, 15 defendants had failed to provide any "substantive evidence" in support of their 16 assumptions, including why fifteen meal breaks or three minimum wage 17 violations "should be presumed." Id. at 9-10. In Carag, defendant's overtime 18 damages calculations were also flawed because "there was no logical basis for 19 using the number of overtime hours paid by Defendants to calculate the amount of 20 unpaid overtime in controversy here. Id. at *11.

21 In Carag, the court also concluded that because there was "insufficient 22 evidence to establish the amount in controversy upon which attorney's fees would 23 be based," defendant's request that the court consider likely attorney's fees in 24 determining the amount in controversy was unpersuasive. Id. at *11.

 28 <sup>1</sup> Plaintiff only refers to Garibay v. Archstone Communities LLC (9th Cir. 2013) 539 F. App'x 763, as it is cited by the published district court opinion in Carag, supra, 2014 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 74215.

5 “[A] district court may not find a defendant has met the preponderance of 6 the evidence standard based on defendant’s mere speculation and conjecture.
 7 Calloway v. Affiliated Computer Servs., Inc. (E.D. Cal. 2014) 2014 U.S. Dist.
 8 LEXIS 24636, 2014 WL 791546, at *7 citing Garibay, supra, 539 F. App’x at 9 764.

10 “Although some courts in this district have accepted tenuous assumptions in 11 the past, “the Ninth Circuit and Courts in this district have recently rejected” 12 assumptions in wage and hours matters “unsupported by the proper evidence.”
 13 Carag, supra, 2014 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 74215* 9 citing Emmons v. Quest
 14 Diagnostics Clinical Labs, Inc. (E.D. Cal. 2014) 2014 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 18024, 15 2014 WL 584393 *7-8, Garibay, supra, 539 F. App’x at 764, Weston v.
 16 Helmerich & Payne Inter. Drilling Co. (E.D. Cal. 2013) 2013 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 17 132930, 2013 WL 5274283 at *3-6.

18 In Carag, plaintiff’s state court action complaint alleged unpaid overtime, 19 unpaid meal period premiums, unpaid rest period premiums, unpaid minimum 20 wages, final wages not timely paid, wages not timely paid during employment, 21 non-compliant wage statements, and failure to keep requisite payroll records in 22 violation of the California Labor Code, as well as the Unfair Competition Law.
 23 Carag, supra, 2014 U.S. Dist. LEXIS at *2. Defendant removed the action under 24 CAFA, basing its removal on a declaration by the Barnes & Noble Director of 25 Human Resources in which she stated that “based on a search of the relevant 26 records she discovered that at least 3,666 individuals worked as hourly or non-27 exempt employees at Barnes & Noble since November 2013.” Id. at *3-4. In its 28 opposition to the motion to remand, Defendant filed a supplemental declaration in

1 which Defendant provided “further explanation of their calculations to support 2 their claim that the amount in controversy meets the jurisdictional minimum for 3 removal.” Id. at *8. The supplemental declaration stated that the Barnes & Noble 4 Director of Human Resources Administration had “examined records for the 5 period from November 27, 2009, through March 1, 2014, and that she determined 6 Barnes & Noble had 2,804 current and 7,666 former non-exempt California
7 employees, totaling 10,470.” Id. at *8. She further asserted that “The lowest 8 starting wage for the class members was $8 per hour, the average amount of 9 overtime paid to all California hourly employees during the period was 1.35 hours 10 and Plaintiff worked an average of 1.06 overtime hours in the 100 weeks from 11 November 27, 2009, to present.” Id. at *8. The declaration also described 12 “certain payment procedures used by Defendants.” Id.

13 The defendant in Carag contended that “because Plaintiff has alleged the 14 class members have not been properly paid, the full thirty days may be used for 15 each of the putative class members” in calculating penalties under Labor Code § 16 203. Id. at 8-9. The court in Carag observed that “the defendants in Garibay 17 similarly assumed that each employee would be entitled to the maximum statutory 18 penalty” and that “the court rejected the assertion because it was not supported by 19 any evidence.” Id.

20 The fatal assumption made by Defendants in this case is quite similar.
21 Defendants claim that, because Plaintiffs allege they are “representative” of the 22 putative class members, that the “average” lease-related costs and the average 23 “fuel costs” for the three named plaintiffs will mirror and be identical to every one 24 of the supposed 557 class members. Although Mr. Quast, in his supplemental 25 declaration, based again on speculation, conjecture and assumptions, estimates 26 there are 700, not 557, class members, this fatal assumption, which is foundational 27 to Defendants’ calculations, remains the same.

28 “When applying the preponderance of the evidence standard to California

1 Labor Code claims, many California District Courts have refused to credit damage 2 calculations based on variables not clearly suggested by the complaint or 3 supported by evidence, concluding that the calculations are mere conjecture.
4 Carag, supra, 2014 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 74215* 12 citing Roth v. Comerica Bank
5 (C.D. Cal. 2010) 799 F. Supp. 2d 1107, 1127. The speculation, conjecture and 6 assumptions are rampant, and in many instances, more exaggerated in the 7 supplemental declaration by Defendants' COO, Kevin Quast.

8 In paragraph 2 of his supplemental declaration, he admits that he is "not 9 aware of the exact details of other companies' lease-to-own programs." This 10 admission makes it even more apparent that paragraph 4 of his original 11 declaration, in which his estimates include 20% of the class members who 12 purchased or leased their tractors from companies that are "not affiliated with 13 either Knight Sales or Knight Transportation" is mere speculation and conjecture.

14 In paragraph 4 of his supplemental declaration, Mr. Quast admits that he 15 had "estimated" that Knight had 116 California-based independent contractors in 16 2010, 135 in 2011, 118 in 2012, and 188 in 2013, for a total of approximately 17 557. He admits that "these numbers were approximate." Mr. Quast attempts to 18 explain the speculative estimate which he calculated "by adding together the 19 number of independent contractors our records showed each month of a particular 20 year, and then dividing that number by 12 months, such that, for example, 116 21 contractors in 2010 means, on average, there were 116 contractors working for 22 Knight each month of 2010." However, there is no evidence about how many 23 independent contractors actually worked each month. There is no substantive 24 evidence about whether "independent contractors our records showed working" 25 means that a particular independent contractor worked for one day during that 26 particular month or whether they worked 7 days a week in that particular month, 27 or whether they worked 5 days a week in that particular month, or some other 28 portion of a particular month. Since the putative class members are designated by 1 Defendants as “independent contractors” they have no set work schedule. Mr.

2 Quast provides no actual substantive evidence whatsoever to substantiate how 3 many days or how many weeks out of any particular month any particular class 4 member works. The supposed “explanation” in paragraph 4 does not provide any 5 additional “substantive evidence” and is woefully inadequate to meet Defendants’ 6 burden of proof in its calculation of the number 557 class members.

7 Nevertheless, as discussed above, paragraph 4 in Mr. Quast’s supplemental 8 declaration does nothing to address the fatal flaw that Defendant uses the average 9 lease-related costs and average fuel costs for the three Plaintiffs and applies those 10 numbers to all 557 (or 700) class members without any evidence whatsoever 11 based on the contention that since they are alleged to be “representative” of the 12 class members, that their damages must be identical.

13 As to paragraph 5 in the supplemental declaration of Kevin Quast, 14 Defendants’ COO, he should be commended for admitting his mistake. However, 15 the explanation doesn’t cure the fatal flaws which exist. First, whether he 16 “mistakenly averaged two facilities together, which skewed down the average 17 number of drivers” as he explains, so that the number of class members is actually 18 700, not 557, does not cure the defects described in connection with paragraph 4.
19 Whether he came up with 700 or 557 class members, still there is no substantive 20 evidence to establish whether any of those class members worked one day a week, 21 five days a week, seven days a week, only one week out of the month, or any 22 subset of an innumerable list of variations. Because the class members are 23 designated by Defendants as “independent contractors,” they have no set work 24 schedule and Defendants have made no effort to establish that. The statement, “I 25 calculated them by adding together the number of independent contractors our 26 records showed working each month of a particular year” is far too vague and 27 generalized. There is no explanation of how many days or how many weeks a 28 particular class member worked. Mr. Quast also states that it was discovered for

1 the first three years of the class period “we mistakenly averaged two facilities 2 together, which skewed down the average number of drivers,” and because of that 3 the “more accurate” numbers increased in each year except 2013 resulting in “700 4 – not 557” class members. There is no evidence whatsoever of why averaging 5 two facilities together would “skew down the average number of drivers.” He 6 also states for 2013 that “because one of the two facilities that had mistakenly 7 been averaged together had been closed down,” the original estimate of 188 was 8 correct. He provides no evidence of when it was closed down, or why that 9 affected the estimate. Defendant fails to provide any evidence to support any of 10 these vague conclusions.

11 Paragraph 6 describes the “term sheet listing” which includes tractor 12 information, insurance information, and loan/financial information for each of the 13 three plaintiffs and attaches the “term sheets” for each of them. These three “term 14 sheets” do nothing to assist Defendants in satisfying their burden of proof. In fact, 15 the “term sheets” demonstrate that the financial terms each of the three plaintiffs 16 have for the purchase of their tractors is different. This paragraph does nothing to 17 cure the fatal flaws in the original declaration by Mr. Quast.

18 Paragraph 7 does not cure the fatal flaws that exist either. Paragraph 7 19 appears to be a further explanation as to why the average of “approximately $450 20 per week for lease-related costs” relied on in his calculation is “typical.” Mr.
21 Quast states that the weekly lease payments for contractors over the class period 22 “range approximately” in certain dollar amounts. For example, they “range 23 approximately” in 2010 from $300 to $375. Mr. Quast does not say whether one 24 class member had a lease payment of $300 and all others had a lease payment of 25 $375, or vice versa, or any other combination of numbers in that range. The same 26 vague approximations exist for all of the years he describes.

27 Paragraph 8 is an attempt to further justify the average fuel costs of $1,138 28 per week used in Defendants’ calculation. This explanation does not comprise

1 “substantive evidence,” rather it actually exposes the assumptions and conjecture 2 relied on. Mr. Quast, in paragraph 8, states “how much fuel a driver uses will of 3 course depend on how much he or she drives.” There is absolutely no 4 “substantive evidence” of how much the class members (whether there are 557 or 5 700) actually drive. Applying $1,138 per week for fuel to every class member is 6 sheer speculation and conjecture.

7 Paragraph 9 is another attempt to justify the $1,138 per week for fuel used 8 in Defendants’ calculation. However, it does not comprise “substantive evidence” 9 because there is no explanation as to how many days or weeks within that time 10 period a particular class member actually drove. Mr. Quast states there were 207 11 drivers “who were working for Knight” during the 3-month period. He does not 12 provide any evidence of how many days or weeks any of the drivers actually 13 worked during that time period. For example, if all 207 only worked for one week 14 each during each of those three months, they would still be counted as working for 15 the 3-month period and Defendant would come up with 2,319 work weeks when, 16 in fact, there were only 207 drivers that worked one week each month for three 17 months, which is 621 work weeks. There is no evidence or explanation as to why 18 the number 621 work weeks should not be used instead of the number 2,319 work 19 weeks. Defendants’ calculation fatally assumes that each of the independent 20 contractors “working for Knight” during that three-month time period worked the 21 entire three-month time period. This is similar to the erroneous assumptions made 22 by the defendants and rejected by the Court in Carag, who relied on “each class 23 member missing fifteen meal breaks per year and suffering three violations of the 24 minimum wage laws per year.” Id. at *10.

25 Paragraph 10 completely lacks any legitimate foundation. Mr. Quast does 26 not provide a citation to the supposed “U.S. Department of Energy” information 27 that he refers to. The information in paragraph 10 is so general and vague, it is far 28 from “substantial evidence.” Moreover, this paragraph doesn’t really add

1 anything to Defendants' calculation of damages and does not, in any way, cure the 2 fatal defects described in the motion to remand.

3 Paragraph 11 suffers from the same defects as paragraph 9 and merely 4 reiterates a part of the explanation contained in paragraph 9.

5 III. THE DECLARATION OF COUNSEL RICHARD H. RAHM FAILS
 6 TO SATISFY DEFENDANTS' EVIDENTIARY BURDEN

7 In paragraphs 2 through 4 and 6 of his declaration, counsel Richard H.
 8 Rahm makes the argument that "the wage-and-hour claims in the Employee 9 Complaint are the same as those in the present independent contractor action 10 insofar as Plaintiffs contend that they were actually employees misclassified as 11 independent contractors." (Rahm decl., ¶4). The Employee Complaint refers to a 12 different lawsuit entitled LaCross, et al. v. Knight Transportation, Inc., C.D. Cal.
 13 Case No. 5:15-cv-0074-JGB-JC, removed by Defendant to this court on April 18, 14 2014 ("Employee Action"). Mr. Rahm then relies upon a settlement demand on 15 behalf of Plaintiffs Patrick LaCross and Robert Lira in the Employee Action to 16 justify a calculation of $18 million dollars in controversy in this action. Mr.
 17 Rahm's simplistic and speculative calculation is fatally flawed for several reasons.

18 The Employee Action defines the classes as employees of Knight holding 19 the position of Company Driver "that were paid a specified amount per mile" and 20 "that were paid a portion of the amount paid by the customer" (Employee 21 Complaint, ¶ 31, Ex. A to Rahm decl.). The Employee Action also alleges that 22 Defendants failed to pay Plaintiffs and members of the classes "separate hourly 23 compensation for non-driving tasks, including but not limited to, inspecting the 24 vehicle and load, loading the vehicle, unloading the vehicle, refueling, repairs, 25 maintenance, paperwork, mandatory meetings, changing light bulbs on the truck, 26 waiting for the truck to be repaired or maintained, hooking up the truck trailer, 27 waiting for the trailer to be loaded, waiting for the customer to unload the vehicle 28 at the destination," and that based on this method of compensation, Defendants

1 failed to pay Plaintiffs and the classes “regular and/or minimum wages for all 2 hours worked and/or overtime wages for all overtime hours worked.” (Employee 3 Complaint, ¶ 49, Ex. A to Rahm decl.). The class definition in this action by 4 independent contractors defines the classes as persons that entered into an 5 independent contractor operating agreement and who were classified as an 6 independent contractor (Plaintiffs’ complaint in this action at ¶ 43). Likewise, this 7 action does not include any factual allegations that Plaintiffs and the class 8 members were not paid “separate hourly compensation for non-driving tasks.”

9 In the cause of action for failure to reimburse business expenses in the 10 Employee Action, Plaintiffs allege that they were not reimbursed for “cell phone 11 costs and charges, and other costs and expenses.” (Employee Complaint, Ex. A to 12 Rahm decl.). However, in this action, the cause of action for failure to fully 13 compensate for business expenses alleges that Plaintiffs and members of the 14 classes have been required to personally incur expenses for “all costs and 15 expenses of owning and/or leasing, repairing, maintaining and fueling the trucks 16 and vehicles they drove in the discharge of their employment duties, all without 17 reimbursement from the Defendants.” (Plaintiffs’ complaint in this action at ¶ 18 115).

19 The substantive allegations upon which the Employee Action is based are 20 substantially different from the allegations in this case, irrespective of the 21 preliminary issue of misclassification that also exists in this action. Here, there is 22 “no logical basis” for using a settlement demand in the Employee Action as a 23 basis for an amount in controversy calculation in this action which alleges 24 misclassification and which is based upon substantively different factual 25 allegations. See, Carag, supra, 2014 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 74215 at *11. In Carag, 26 supra, the District Court determined “there is no logical basis for using the 27 number of overtime hours paid by Defendants to calculate the amount of unpaid 28 overtime in controversy here.” Id. Likewise, here there is no logical basis for

1 using a settlement demand in the Employee Action which is based upon different 2 factual allegations.

3 The amount in controversy calculation in paragraph 4 of Mr. Rahm's 4 declaration relies upon the number of 577 class members and suffers from the 5 same problems that are described in connection with the declaration of Kevin 6 Quast, who came up with that number. In addition, Mr. Rahm's calculation uses 7 the number "28,850 worked weeks," which is based upon "577 drivers x 50 8 weeks." The selection of "50 weeks" is complete speculation and conjecture. Mr.
9 Rahm provides no factual basis whatsoever to substantiate that these independent 10 contractors worked 50 weeks in each calendar year. Rather, their designation by 11 Defendants as "independent contractors" by definition means that they have no set 12 work week and any of them could choose to work less than 50 weeks per calendar 13 year.

14 In paragraph 7 of his declaration, Mr. Rahm merely points out that the 15 Carson court "never ruled on this argument" referring to one of the primary 16 rationales provided by the parties in their preliminary approval motion pending 17 before the Carson court as a reason to justify the very modest settlement in that 18 action. However, Mr. Rahm's explanation that the argument had never been ruled 19 on does not in any way undermine whether this court should consider this in the 20 motion to remand. For example, if the class period in this action was contended to 21 be six months rather than a period of years, certainly that would be relevant for 22 this court to consider in evaluating whether Defendants had satisfied their burden 23 of proof to establish the amount in controversy. That is the case, even if the 24 length of the statute of limitations was subject to dispute and had not yet been 25 ruled upon. The parties in the Carson action have presented a motion for 26 preliminary approval to the Tulare Superior Court and a basis for requesting that 27 approval is that only mileage driven in California is recoverable. However, in the 28 amount in controversy by Defendants in their notice of removal, Defendant have

1 made absolutely no effort to quantify the number of miles driven in California as 2 opposed to outside of California. This renders Defendants' calculation of the 3 amount in controversy "speculative" and based on "self-serving assumptions 4 about key unknown variables." Carag, supra, 2014 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 74215 at 5 *9-10, citing Garibay, 539 F. App'x at 764.

6 IV. CONCLUSION

7 Based on the foregoing and Plaintiffs' motion to remand, this action should 8 be remanded to State Court.
